THE EBENSBURG
NORMAL INSTITUTE
—WILL OPEN—
MAY 8, 1882,
—IN THE—
Union School Building, Ebensburg, Pa.,
UNDER THE SUPERVISION OF
CO. SUP'T L. STRAYER AND CHAS. A. RIDDLE.

First Session of the Ebensburg Normal Institute.

EVERY TEACHER who has risen to the ordinary routine of school work has attended school and by superior mental and physical culture, habits, modes of thought, and attainments, has been enabled to teach with pleasure and satisfaction to himself and with honor to the profession. Those who rise higher do it by mental training; results are accomplished only by study and training of the mind.

It is not lack of talent, time, or money, but the lack of will and determination of purpose which prevents many teachers and young people from attending school.

The public demand educational progress; the profession demands the best talent, the best special preparation possible on the part of teachers. The greatest want of the age is the want of good teachers.

DESIGN.

The design of the Normal Institute is to provide better teachers for Cambria county—to furnish a school for our teachers who are not prepared to attend a State Normal School—to accommodate young men and women who are preparing to teach, and to advance the cause of education.

INSTRUCTION.

Thorough instruction will be given in all branches that students desire to study. Special attention will be paid to the branches named on teachers' certificates, but students who are prepared will be encouraged to take up other studies.

Classes will be organized in Latin, Algebra, Physiology, Book-Keeping, Geometry, Botany, &c. Drawing will receive special attention. Instruction in Vocal Music will also be given.

MODEL SCHOOL.

The Model School will be composed of the pupils of the Ebensburg Public Schools.

The design of the Model School is two-fold: first, to present our students with an example of what a public school should be; and, second, to furnish a place where they may observe the best methods in use, and learn by trial how to put theory into practice.

Opportunities will be given students to visit the Model School, where they may witness the operation of approved methods, under the supervision of the managers of the school. The County Superintendent will make a specialty of this department.

Teachers will meet twice a week for class criticism and discussion of work, at which times the excellencies and defects of methods will be pointed out, that all may profit thereby.

TERMS, &c.

The Normal Institute will open on Monday, May 8, 1882; length of term, nine weeks. Tuition, for Teachers' Course, $7.00; for Preparatory Course, $5.00.

Good boarding can be secured for $3.00 per week. Students who wish boarding secured before the opening of school should write to either of the undersigned.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Dictionaries, Encyclopedias, and all necessary books of reference, will be at disposal of students.

A Literary Society will be organized, and, in connection with the regular instructions of the school, will afford students fine opportunities for literary culture.

Students are recommended to bring all text-books and other books of reference, as the topical method will be largely used. Students should be in attendance the first day of school. No extra charges for higher studies.

L. STRAYER,
C. A. RIDDLE.

N. B.—It is desirable that students confer with us at their earliest convenience before the school opens. [3-24.-tf.]

THIS DEGENERATE AGE.

Ah! those days have gone forever, with their splendid fire and fever,
And their lofty scorn of living, and their quenchless thirst of fame!
When faith and beauty filled them, and when love and glory thrilled them,
And the sacred light of Honor led them like a flitting Flame.

And the minstrels, tender-hearted! they are silent and departed,
With their amatory music, once so delicate and sweet;
Now we never sigh to hear them, but we fly them and we fear them—
Grinding melancholy organs on the corners of the street.

Gone the Pirate and the Sea King, and Buccaneer and Viking;
Furled the banner of the Rover, hushed his canon's heavy roar;
And the only reminiscence of his nautical existence
Is the banging of the big drum in the play of "Pinafore."

Gone's the glamour and the glory of the Knights of song and story,
With their love and high endeavor, and their noble deeds and aims!
Of heroic days behind us, now there's nothing to remind us
But the Solitary Horseman in the narrative of James.

Yes! the Knights so celebrated, in these days degenerated
Would be madmen or marauders—we would ridicule their cause—
And the Pirate of the shipping would be hanged, or get a whipping,
And the Troubadours be prisoned under local vagrant laws.

Now the soul that scorns to grovel, can but revel in the novel
Of Sir Walter Scott or Bulwer, on the days of long ago;
And of Brian de Bourbeon, and of mighty Coeur de Lion,
And of Launcelot and Arthur, and immortal Ivanhoe.

For the prosy and pedantic have extinguished the romatic,
And the pomp and pride of chivalry are driven from the stage;
All is now so faint and tender that the world has lost its gender,
And the enervate Æsthetic is the model of the Age!

—The Century.

UNDERNEATH THE GROUND.

The "Monarch of the West" was a mine which had attracted no small attention among mining men. It had an able superintendent in the person of Mr. James Clarke, who was well known for his skill in managing large mines such as the "Monarch." The main shaft of the "Monarch" was two thousand two hundred and fifty feet deep. On the surface of the ground near it were the great hoisting engines, each with its enormous cylinder, piston, and connecting rods. Gigantic reels could be seen on the main shaft of the engines upon which were wound the great steel ropes which hoisted the cages up and down in the shaft. Near the engine were the enormous air pumps, used to force air down into the mine so that the men could breathe.

If the view on the surface was somewhat strange, that below was no less so. Going down the great shaft in one of the cages—something like the thing you get into when you ride in an elevator—and off at one of the levels you see a long narrow passage way cut in the rock. Along the floor are laid rails side by side for the cars containing the ore to be drawn. Walking along this level you come to wooden spouts, marking the places where the "slopes"—or passages through which the ore is tumbled from the "breasts" above, where it is cut out, into the cars on the level—are situated. Crawling up one of these you come to the breast itself, where the men are working. Here are the miners, clad in coarse shirts and trowsers, dripping with perspiration—for the heat is very great—cutting out the ore. In every direction you see enormous timbers, fitted together like some intricate puzzle, and filling up the place where the ore has been taken out. These timbers are put in to prevent a "cave" of the upper stratum of rock when it has nothing to support it.

I do not suppose that Mr. James Clarke thought very much about these things as he stood on the edge of the shaft, preparatory to going into the mine that Tuesday morning. As a matter of fact, he was thinking about a very different thing—the result of the last assay made by the assayer of the "core" brought out by the diamond drill; an assay which had been so good that Mr. Clarke was considerably elated over it. As Mr. Clarke stepped into the cage and gave the signal to lower, he concluded his last remark by saying:

"Well, I'm going into that north drift, and will see the thing for myself." And as the cage was going down at the time there was a ridiculous diminuendo effort produced.

Mr. Clarke reached the 1600 foot level, the cage stopped, and he stepped out. As he did so he was met by Ewan Jones, the "mining boss," or assistant superintendent, and the two proceeded along the narrow level in the direction of the north drift. As they walked the light of the candles fastened just over the vizors of their caps cast very queer shadows on the dripping walls of stone. Strange masses of white fungi could be seen in every corner—masses which had assumed the most fantastic shapes, and in the light of the candles had a weird effect of miniature men and animals, and trees and buildings, seeming as though a city of dwarfs had been suddenly transformed by some magician and condemned forever to remain mere memories. The miners were working far off, and the place was strangely still. As the men walked the sound of their footsteps would go echoing along the level until lost in a confused murmur.

Passing the shoots on their way by scores, the two men steadily tramped on. Reaching at last the "face" of the level, the place where the cutting had been going on and from which, aided by the diamond drill, they had taken the core, the assay of which had so much pleased Mr. Clarke, they began to examine the rock.

"Seems to me, Jones, they haven't timbered this place up enough."

"Well, sir, we ran out of timbers just about the time they got here, and the new lot hadn't come. What there were I wanted down below."

"All right. See that they put them in to-morrow, will you? I don't like this empty place. By the way, isn't that a little stringer of ore I see on the left? That bit there by the pick mark."

"We'll soon see, sir," and, so saying, Jones grasped a pick and struck at the wall.

It seemed as though the blow was a signal. Scarcely had it been struck when a noise, like nothing on earth, was heard throughout the mine. At the same minute the walls of the level in which they were seemed to bend in, then out and then in again; great blocks of stone fell from them, the ground on which the men stood rocked, and then—all was still.

The two men stood with blanched faces looking at each other. Both men were brave, both were old and experienced miners; yet as they stood there, frightful fear could be seen in each white face.

"Pray God there's only one shock," said Mr. Clarke, in a husky tone. "If you get out, Ewan, tell my wife I thought of her at the last."

Ewan nodded and grasped the other's hand. Then they waited. Not long, for in a minute the same horrible sound was heard, and again the ground rocked to and fro; again the walls closed in and out like savage beasts reaching for their prey, and more blocks of stone fell, closing up the passage before them. This time a fragment, in falling, struck with one of its sharp corners Ewan's shoulder, cutting through the old jacket and wounding him slightly. Then all was still once more.

The two men panted for breath; cold drops of perspiration stood out on their foreheads like dew, and they trembled so that they could scarcely stand. I have said that they were brave. Either would have faced almost any danger that could be named with firm nerves and stout heart. But an earthquake in a mine is so indescribably horrible, so terrible in its effects that it is no small wonder that they, standing here alone, were panic-struck. Again they waited, waited while each minute seemed an age, for the third shock. It did not come. The earthquake was at an end.

The place in which they were was strangely altered. When they came there it had been simply the end of a passage-way, about eight feet wide and seven feet high. Scattered around it there had been tools, and here and there small pieces of stone or ore which had been removed. Now, however, it was nearly filled with a chaotic mass of broken rock, and a wide crack had been opened on one side. Strangely enough the men, with the exception of Ewan's slight wound in the shoulder, had not been hurt. The broken masses of stone had fallen all around them, but, as if with a fiendish desire to see them die slowly, wasting away through starvation and thirst, the earthquake had spared them. About fifteen feet from the face of the drift the walls had fallen in and closed the passage way out. The men were shut up in a chamber fifteen feet long, eight feet wide and seven feet high, and even this small space was partly filled up with loose fragments of stone, and they were sixteen hundred feet below the surface of the earth.

How long they stood there grasping each other's hand, neither of them ever knew. At length, by a sort of impulse they sat down on the stones, still holding each other, and waited, silent. Finally the superintendent tried once or twice to speak, but failing to do so, took off his cap and blew out his candle, nodding to his companion to do the same. Ewan rose, and picking his way to one corner of the place, stooped down. In a moment he came back, holding his hands together, and showed the superintendent that in them was a little water. Mr. Clarke eagerly drank the few drops, and then recovering his voice, said:

"Where did you get it?"

"There's a little hollow there in the floor, and it's full," was Ewan's reply.

"Thank God for that. We won't die of thirst, at any rate."

"What are our chances, do you think, Jim?" asked Ewan.

"The men may come after us, for the engineer and Lawson both know where we are. Were there many men in the mine, Ewan?"

"I hope so; I pray so." And the superintendent was silent.

Ewan put out his candle, and the two men sat in the dark. Strange images seemed to pass before their eyes, images born of the horror of their situation; shapeless images which, with grotesque incongruity, seemed formed of light, or were thousand-eyed. They imagined that they heard queer sounds, like booming thunder at a distance, yet when they listened all was still. At intervals they would nervously talk, and then relapse again into silence, as though they were unable to bear the sound of their own voices. And the time went on, dragging the weary hours in its train.

* * * * * *

At the surface all was excitement. The shock had been severe enough to level one or two small and lightly-built houses; but neither the mill nor hoisting works were injured. The first thought had been for the men in the mine. As Ewan had supposed, most of the morning shift had come out and but few of the others had gone in. The timbers in the shaft had been sprung so that the cages would not pass; but it was a matter of a few minutes to take them out and fasten to the end of the rope a jury cage, which being smaller than the shaft, passed easily. The men in the mine, being at the bottom of the shaft, were soon hoisted out, more frightened than hurt, with the exception of one who had been killed by the falling of a stone. Then came the job of rescuing the superintendent and Ewan, who were known to be in the north drift. Both were very popular, but it did not need this to make the call for volunteers one which was responded to by all of the men present—some three hundred and fifty—stepping forward. The surface superintendent, Mr. Cleaves, told the men off in gangs of twenty, each under a gang boss, and ordered that they should relieve each other every twenty minutes. The first gang stepped into the jury cage and were soon at the entrance of the 1600-foot level. Entering the level, they passed along. The effects of the earthquake were plainly visible. The level was about half full of broken stone. The sides were splintered and cracked in all directions, while the heavy timbers were bent and twisted until they looked as though they had been contorted by great agony. The debris increased in quantity as they advanced until, when within forty-five feet of the face they found their way completely blocked. Finding that more than twenty men could be employed, Mr. Cleaves sent for two more gangs, and all of the men began to clear away the loose stone, piling it up along the sides. As the gang in front moved in they came to larger and larger stones. The men worked literally with giant strength, for the constant succession of miners, a man grasping the pick or sledge when, through exhaustion, another let it fall, enabled each to put his utmost effort. Great masses of rock were broken, cracked, and moved away with wonderful speed. Finally they came to a piece which seemed to be a part of the roof fallen in bodily. A hasty examination convinced Mr. Cleaves that blasts would have to be used, and he directed the men to drill the rock in a great many places, but to avoid going to any great depth. This being done, and the cartridges being placed in position, a mass about four feet square, extending into the blocking piece of rock about eighteen inches was blown bodily out. Into the excavation thus made the drills were placed again and the operation repeated. By this time Mr. Cleaves had six diamond drills in position, the pipes connected with the air-compressors above, and these drove the holes for the cartridges far faster than could be done by hand.

At the end of thirty hours from the time of the shock one of the diamond drills suddenly began to whirl around like mad. It was instantly stopped and withdrawn, and then Mr. Cleaves shouted through the hole:

"Clarke! Jones! are you there?"

A voice answered the call with "Yes, we're here, and all right."

"They ain't dead boys," announced Mr Cleaves; and a cheer went up that could have been heard a long distance. "Only two feet more to cut," continued the surface superintendent. "We can't use any more powder."

"Sure and we'll tear it out wid our nails ef there's no other way," remarked one of the men.

A few minutes more and the hole was enlarged enough to get the superintendent and Ewan through. The men fairly carried them out of the shaft in their arms and placed them in the cage. Then the signal being given, up the shaft they began to go. When they got to the top Mr. Clarke's hair was noticed by all. It had been brown when he had gone in; it was now snow white.

BRAVE KATE SHELLEY.

AN IRISH GIRL HONORED BY THE IOWA LEGISLATURE.

The Iowa Legislature has unanimously voted to confer a $150 gold medal and $200 in money upon Kate Shelley, a girl whose cool courage and devotion entitle her to be classed with Grace Darling in public esteem. The daughter of a poor widow, Kate was but a little over 15 years old when in the week of July there burst upon the section near Des Moines one of the most furious storms ever known. Railway bridges, culverts and tracks were swept away like floating cork. Over Honey Creek, in one of these gorges, was a high, long bridge. Kate had become familiar with the passage of the trains, and as the storm increased in fury, she went to a window overlooking the railroad and peered out into the darkness to watch the track, made visible only by the lightning flash. Soon she saw the advancing headlight of a locomotive approaching Honey creek bridge. It entered the bridge; the headlight swung to the right and left and went down with a crash. She at once determined to go to the rescue. She knew there would soon follow the Pacific express train, and, unless warned of the danger, it would sweep into the abyss. Lighting a small miner's lamp, she improvised a lantern by placing the lamp inside a lantern globe. Fully realizing the perilous task she was undertaking, she kissed her mother and sisters and hastened to the scene of danger. Her only course was up the banks of a high, abrupt bluff. This she climbed, and, drenched to the skin, in the blinding rain, by the lightning flash she followed the bluff to a point opposite the bridge, where she again descended the bluff, rending hands and clothes. Standing on the abutment of the bridge, she lowered her feeble lamp into the yawning chasm, and asked if any one was alive. There came back a feeble response from the engineer, the only survivor of the four strong men. He had been swept away from his cab against the top of a tree, but the whirling torrent, rapidly swelling, was sweeping logs and driftwood against his frail support. She was powerless to render him any aid, and she determined to hasten to Moingonna, a mile distant, and warn the Pacific express of the impending peril.

Cautiously she felt her way along the narrow track at a high grade, until she reached the long bridge over Des Moines River, and here her feeble light went out. The wind and rain nearly took away her breath. She knew that to walk the bridge would be impossible, so, getting on her hands and knees, she crawled over the open bridge, floored only with the timbers on which the rails rested, for 500 feet, with the river rushing madly beneath her. With almost superhuman strength the frail girl reached the farther side, and hastened on to the station, quickly relating what she knew, and asking that the Pacific express, then already due, be stopped. She fell in a swoon upon the platform. She was tenderly cared for, but for months she lay in bed, tortured by rheumatic pains and prostrated by the terrible strain.

A WARM INVITATION.—Jesse B., of Raleigh, N. C., was engaged in the lightning rod business. He had just put up the necessary rods for a farmer, and was judging, from a certain unpleasant sensation in the region of the diaphram, that the hour of dinner was near at hand. In other words, he had not tasted food since early that morning, and did not know where his next meal was to come from, unless he was invited to dine with Farmer B.

At length, after some hesitation, the farmer said: "It's about our dinner hour, but the old woman is away from home to-day, and I hardly know what to do about it; but if you will take pot luck with me, you are welcome to dinner." Jesse thanked him, and they two wended their way to the dining-room. They found nothing to eat save a dish of roasted potatoes and a pot of mustard.

After being seated, the farmer asked Jess. to take some potatoes.

"No, I thank you," said Jess. "I don't like potatoes."

"Well," said the farmer, not in the least disconcerted, "just help yourself to the mustard!"

Jess. tells the story, and says it was one of the warmest invitations he ever received.

WHAT HE OWED TO HIS WIFE.—"I suppose I might as well destroy this," said the tailor disconsolately to his wife, taking the bill due him from one of the deacons of the church to which they belonged.

"Not a bit of it," returned his wife. "Give it to me."

The next Sunday morning when the plate was passed round for subscriptions to pay off the floating debt she dropped the bill in it, and before the middle of the week it was paid.

"Marriage is a lottery," remarked the happy tailor as he pocketed the money, "but I advise every man to take the chances."

FORTY-TWO IRISHMEN.

THEIR WONDERFUL EXPLOIT AT SABINE PASS IN THE DAYS OF JEFF DAVIS.

SABINE PASS, TEXAS, March 10, 1882.—In looking from the site of this town toward the Gulf, the most conspicuous object, next to the light-house on the Louisiana shore, is the wreck of the steamship Clifton. She was burned while running the blockade in 1865, loaded with 600 bales of Confederate cotton. Her tilted smoke-stacks and upper works are a guide to pilots seeking the dredged channel through the soft blue mud of the outer bar. The Clifton formerly belonged to the United States Government, and formed part of the Franklin expedition which was dispersed September, 1863, by forty-two Irishmen, fighting under the Confederate flag. It was one of the most memorable incidents not only in the history of our late war, but in the record of all wars.—At the North this achievement is scarcely known or remembered, while here it is dwelt upon and retold as though it were a feat surpassing that of Leonidas and his 300 Spartans. Capt. Stuart, a venerable coast pilot, while accompanying your correspondent on a tour of inspection down the bay in the little tugboat Fannie, circumstantially related, as an eye witness, his recollections of the affair.

The Pass is eight miles long and from three-quarters of a mile to a mile in width, with a depth of water varying from twelve to forty-five feet. Its capacity as a harbor has recently been brought into prominence by the number of railways projected here.—On the Louisiana side the shore is low and reedy, while on the Texas side there are several shell ridges and an elevated plateau, upon which are the remains of what was once Sabine City. About two miles below this are the grass-grown parapets of a rude fort known as Fort Griffith. It was in this earth-work that Lieut. Dick Dowling, an Irishman, with two twelve-pounders and a command of forty-two men, all natives of Ireland, lay concealed on the 9th day of September, 1863, when the Federal fleet, composed of a large number of transports and gunboats, appeared off the mouth of the Pass.

It is said here that there were 15,000 men in the expedition, while Dowlings was the only rebel force in the neighborhood nearer than Beaumont, on the Neches River, thirty-two miles above. The objects of the expedition were to co-operate with the movement of Gen. Banks up the Red River, and to secure the vast stores of cotton collected in the vicinity of the Pass. During the afternoon a number of gunboats effected a passage over the bar, and, ascending the bay, vigorously shelled the shores in all directions, and at the same time making sounding and marking the main channel with long poles driven into the mud. During this reconnoissance Dowling's guns were withdrawn from sight. Secure in the shelter of bombproofs, his men whiled away the time chatting and playing cards. After the retirement of the gunboats, and under cover of darkness, Dowling's men explored the harbor in small boats, removing the poles and planting them in positions calculated to mislead.

On the following day the fleet appeared in grand array, preceded by the gunboat Sachem on the Louisiana side and the transport Clifton, with over three hundred men on board, moving along the Texas shore. The formidable appearance of the expedition and its destructive equipment produced no panic among the handful of Irishmen in Fort Griffith. When the Clifton arrived within point blank range the twelve pounders were instantly brought forth, manned, and fired. A shot struck the vessel amidships. In the flurry created by the sudden attack she went aground. A second shot penetrated and disabled the machinery of the Sachem, and she drifted helplessly ashore, using her guns without effect. The engagement lasted but a few minutes; the commanders of the Sachem and Clifton struck their colors and the remainder of the fleet retired down the bay and beyond the bar.

Dowling's uninjured command was still kept partly out of sight to conceal the smallness of its numbers. The Lieutenant himself went aboard the Clifton to receive the formal surrender. Its commander, who was afterward dismissed from the service, appeared on the deck, sword in hand. He requested to be informed of Dowling's rank.—Learning that he was only a Lieutenant, he said that he could not hand him his sword. He threw it toward him on the deck. The Lieutenant refused to pick it up and was about to go ashore, declaring that he would blow up all on board in less than five minutes, when the sword was picked up and formally presented to him. He then retired to the fort, keeping his guns trained on the vessels all day while awaiting the arrival of reinforcements to take charge of the prisoners. About nightfall these arrived. It was not until the prisoners were all safely landed that they were made aware of how small a force it was to whom they had surrendered.

The Federal fleet did not re-appear. Of course the report of this remarkable exploit created great rejoicing throughout the Confederacy and Dowling's company, known as the Davis Guards, were especially honored by a resolution of thanks passed by the Confederate Congress. An appropriate bronze medal was struck and distributed to each member of the command. Jeff Davis was made an honorary member of the corps and was likewise decorated with a commemorative medal. Dowling's career after the war was that of a popular saloon keeper in the city of Houston, where his place was the common resort of ex-Confederates and boys in blue, many of whom accredited his great feat to the glory of old Ireland rather than to the cause of the Confederacy. He died of yellow fever in 1868.

In 1874 Jeff Davis was a guest of the State Agricultural Fair in Houston, and was formally visited by the remnant, but five in number, of the Davis Guard. One of these was Mike Dowling, a brother of the deceased hero. Davis received them impressively, and when he told the boys that his medal had been taken from him while a prisoner at Fortress Monroe, Mike stepped forward and tearfully pinned his own on the breast of the ex-Confederate chief. They separated after a glass of poteen all around and many avowals of gratification that the bloody war was over.

IT SEEMS IMPOSSIBLE that a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., should make so many and such great cures as Hop Bitters do; but when old and young, rich and poor, pastor and doctor, lawyer and editor, all testify to having been cured by them, you must believe and try them yourself, and doubt no longer.

HOW TO DO IT.

THE WAY EDITORS SHOULD APPLY FOR PASSES.

Bill Nye of the Laramie Boomerang suggests to editors the following form of letter in applying for railway passes. The phraseology is original with Nye, but many a General Passenger Agent will testify that the noble and independent ideas are as old as the hills:

OFFICE OF FREEDOM'S BUGLE HORN, }
WAHOO, NEB., Feb. 22, 1882. }

To Hon. J. Q. Gall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent J. I. M. C. R. O. W. Ry., Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR SIR:—Unfortunately you have never experienced the glad thrill and holy joy of my acquaintance.

You have groped through the long and dreary heretofore without that solemn gladness that you might have enjoyed had Providence thrown you in the golden sunlight of my smile.

I have addressed you at this moment for the purpose of ascertaining your mental convictions relative to obtaining a pass over your voluptuous line. The Bugle Horn being only a semi-annual, you will probably have some little reservation about issuing an annual on the strength of it.

This, however, is a fatal error on your part.

It is true that this literary blood searcher and kidney polisher, if I may be allowed that chaste and eccentric expression, does not occur very often, but when it does shoot athwart the journalistic horizon, error and cock-eyed ignorance begin to seek tall grass.

You will readily see how it is in my power to throw your road into the hands of a receiver in a few days. It will occur to you instantly that, with the enormous power in my hands, something should be done at once to muzzle and subsididize me. The Bugle Horn stands upon the pinnacle of pure and untarnished independence. Her clarion notes are ever heard above the din of war and in favor of the poor, the down-trodden and the oppressed. Still it is my solemn duty to foster and encourage a few poor and deserving monopolies.

I have already taken your road and, so to speak, placed it upon its feet. Time and again I have shut my eyes to unpleasant facts, relative to your line, because I did not wish to crush a young and growing industry. I can point to many instances where hot boxes and other outrages upon the traveling public have been ignored by me and allowed to pass by.

Last fall you had a wash-out at Jimtown, which was criminally inexcusable in its character, but I passed silently over the occurrence in order that you might redeem yourself. One of your conductors, an overgrown baldheaded pelican from Laramie, a man of no literary ability and who could not write a poem to save his measly, polluted soul from perdition, once started the train out of Wahoo when I was within one-fourth of a mile of the depot and left me gazing thoughtfully down the track with a 130 pound hand trunk to carry back home with me.

What did I do? Did I go to the telegraph office and wire you to stop the train and kill the conductor with a coal pick? Did I cut short his unprofitable life and ruin the road with my cruel pen?

No, sir.

I hushed up the matter. I kept it out of the papers as far as possible in order that your soulless corporation might have a new lease of life.

Another time when my pass and pocket money had expired at about the same moment and I undertook to travel upon my voluptuous shape, a red headed conductor whose soul had never walked upon the sunlit hills of potent genius, caught me by the bosom of the pants and forcibly ejected me from the train while it was in motion and with such vigor and enthusiasm that I rolled down an embankment 100 feet with frightful rapidity and loss of life.

A large bottle of tanzy and sweet spirit hear my prayer, which I had concealed about my person to keep off malaria and rattlesnakes, was frightfully crushed and segregated. Besides all this my feelings were hurt and outraged, and so was the portion of my pantaloons.

Others would have burned down a water tank, or dusted off a crossing with the mangled corpse of the general passenger agent, but I did not. I bound up my bleeding heart and walked home beneath the cold unblinking stars and forgave the cruel wrong.

I now ask you whether in view of all this you will or will not stand in the pathway of your company's success? Will you refuse me a pass and call down upon yourself the avalanche of my burning wrath, or will you grant me an annual and open such an era of prosperity for the J. I. M. C. R. O. W. Railway as it never before knew?

Do you want the aid and encouragement of the Bugle Horn and success, or do you want its opposition and a pauper's grave beneath the blue-eyed Johnny jump-ups of the valley?

Ostensibly I am independent and fearless, but if you look around for a journal to subsidize, do not forget the number of my post-office box. I have made and unmade several railroads already, and it makes me shudder to think of the horrible fate which awaits you if you hold your nose too high and stiffen your official neck.

Should you enclose the pass, I would be very grateful to you for any little suggestions during the year as to what my fearless and outspoken opinion should be relative to your company.

Hoping to hear from you favorably in the contiguous ultimately, I beg leave to wish you a very pleasant bon vivant.

Very sincerely yours,
EPHRAIM BATES,
Moulder of Public Sentiment.

A FRIENDLY SCUFFLE.—When Lee's graybacks were making their way through Pennsylvania to Gettysburg, two infantrymen belonging to Picket's Virginians raided into a Quaker's house in search of something to eat. They were met at the door by the owner of the premises, who asked:

"Are you rebels?"

"You bet we are," was the blunt reply.

"And what do you wish here?"

"Fodder, old man; and don't you keep us waiting for it."

"If thee wishes for something to eat, thou canst have it," said the Quaker to the spokesman, but I trust that ye will take nothing from the house."

It was a poor trust. After the boys had finished their meal one of them pocketed a watch which was hanging on a nail, and the other seized upon a silver cream pitcher as a token of remembrance.

"Are ye thieves as well as rebellious citizens?" indignantly demanded the old man as he confronted them.

"Stand aside and let us out, or we'll damage you."

"Verily, I will not! Thou must not rob my house."

"Never mind him, Bill—Quakers don't fight," called the one in the rear. "Hit him a clip on the chin and run for it."

"Truly, I shall not fight," calmly observed the disciple of Penn, as he pushed up his sleeves and spat on his hands; "but if in a friendly scuffle to recover possession of mine own the robber should get injured I shall not have to answer to my conscience."

There was a "friendly scuffle" in the next York minute, and one of the trio, who is now a resident of Richmond, vividly remembers that his companion complained of a sore throat, dizziness, lame back, and depressed spirits. All the remarks made after the scuffle commenced were simply a few words dropped by the Quaker to the effect that:

"I am sorry to put thee out, and sorry to damage thee, but it is better that thou shouldst go thy ways up the pike toward destruction."

Cambria Freeman.

EBENSBURG, PA.,
FRIDAY, - - - - APRIL 7, 1882.

GEN. STEPHEN A. HURLBUT, of Illinois, United States Minister to Peru, whose name has of late figured so conspicuously in the newspapers in connection with the peace negotiations between that country and Chili, died suddenly of heart disease at Lima, the capital of Peru, on Monday of last week. He was a native of Charleston, S. C., was sixty-five years of age, and has resided in Illinois since 1845.

LAST week's Scientific American contained an elaborate and interesting description, with illustrations, of the New York World's new five story building, into which that successful newspaper recently moved its quarters. As the World is a model journal in all its departments, it is in accordance with the fitness of things that it should be issued from what is probably the best equipped and most thoroughly complete newspaper establishment in the country.

MISS MARY POWER O'CONNOR, sister of Thomas Power O'Connor, member of Parliament for the city of Galway, Ireland, was indicted at the Roscommon county sessions on Saturday last for advising the tenants of a landlord not to pay their rents, and was ordered to give bail or go to jail for six months. She elected to go to jail, and went. Miss Mary is supposed, like every other person, to know her own business best, and as she saw fit to open her own prison door any comments on her choice would be entirely superfluous.

IF the scalawag who edits the Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye should ever visit this place during one of his lecturing tours, we leave our large Welsh population to square accounts with him, in any way that may seem the most effectual and summary, for having in a recent number of his scurrillous journal deliberately and maliciously published of and concerning the children of Wales, the following false, scandalous and defamatory libel: "Statistics disclose the fact that to every ten children born in Wales, less than seven ever reach their twentieth year. The others are worn out trying to speak Welsh."

THERE is great force in the annexed paragraph taken from the Philadelphia Record on the subject of fish culture by farmers and we commend it to the careful consideration of those of that class of our citizens through whose land small streams of water flow. The experiment is a cheap one and would undoubtedly richly compensate any one for the little trouble and trifling outlay attending it. The Record says:

> Since it is said that an acre of fish pond will produce more food that five acres of ground, why should not farmers raise their own fish as systemmatically as they do hogs or cattle? And why should they not turn their attention to fish culture as a regular industry and source of profit, especially those who have the advantages of good markets; There are few farms that with a little labor and expense could not get water to supply a fish-pond.

THE New York World expresses the opinion that if Sergeant Mason should "be pardoned for having tried to kill Guiteau and failed, he might consistently ask to be promoted if, encouraged by pardon, he should try it again and succeed." What an immense amount of gush and sentiment have been indulged in over Mason's sentence? Even old Thurlow Weed, who is over eighty years of age, speaks of Mason's offense as having been "prompted by right feelings and impulsively committed." Mason, on the contrary, expressed a desire to shoot Guiteau before he came to Washington, and in carrying out his intention was guilty of betraying the trust reposed in him as one of the prisoner's guard. His offense was not mitigated one iota because of the infamy of his intended victim.

MAHONE's negro allies in Virginia are becoming rebellious against his assumptions as their boss. Both Mahone and Cameron, the lately elected Readjuster Governor of the State, live in Petersburg, which, together with eleven counties, some of which adjoin it and some are more or less remote from it, constitute the Fourth Congressional district, with an overwhelming black population, always good for 8,000 majority for the Republicans. There are several negro statesmen in the shell in that district and they have arrived at the conclusion that it is about time for them to assert their political rights and to send a man of their own color to represent them at Washington, instead of allowing Mahone to select a white repudiationist for them. When the proper time arrives they propose to hold a nominating convention and name their candidate, which will of course rule out Mahone's man. There have been other indications of the same movement in other parts of the State, all going to show that Mahone's political death is a mere question of time.

ONE of the most successful methods with members of Congress for squandering the public money, and one which they all eagerly embrace, is by procuring large appropriations for the erection by the government of postoffices thro'-out the States. Bills for this purpose are passing through Congress in frightful numbers under what is known as the "log-rolling" system of legislation, and the amount of money which is in this way filched from the treasury at each session is enormous, reaching many millions of dollars. As one of a score of instances of these reckless assaults on the treasury, there is now before Congress a bill appropriating $150,000 for the erection of a postoffice building at Montpelier, Vermont, a town containing about the same population as Hollidaysburg. This sort of legislation will continue just as long as the short-sighted policy of the government keeps up the present enormous surplus in the treasury vaults. One of the country's greatest statesmen said in a speech in the Senate thirty years ago, that a large treasury surplus inevitably leads to inconsiderate, extravagant and profligate appropriations.

THE State Committee of the Greenback party met at Harrisburg on Wednesday of last week, and having first removed E. S. Watson, of Lycoming county, from the position of chairman of the committee for alleged unfaithfulness and elected Frank S. Heath, of Erie county, in his place, decided to hold the State convention at Harrisburg, on the 18th of May. Our old and esteemed friend, John Dougherty, so long a resident of Hollidaysburg, but now of Mt. Union, Huntingdon county, was in attendance as a member of the Committee, and although he does not seem to have taken a very active part in the proceedings, he revealed to a reporter of the Patriot a big scheme he has in view of securing cheap transportation between New York and San Francisco. He admitted to the reporter that the "money question is about settled," and then stated his project in regard to the transportation business, thus: "I propose that the government of the United States shall solve the transportation question, by building a free railroad from New York to San Francisco, which will cost five hundred millions of dollars, and which, after the profits of the road shall have paid the government for its construction, shall be thrown open to the public." He forgot to give any figures showing how long a time it would take a 'free railroad' to pay back to the government the trifling sum of five hundred millions expended in its construction; but that is a matter which he no doubt believes will be easily solved. There is nothing small or contracted about Mr. D.'s free railroad scheme; on the contrary, it is bold and comprehensive, and if he was permitted to run the government for a few years, with power to issue greenbacks at his own pleasure, his road might possibly become an accomplished fact, instead of, as now, a fanciful delusion.

THAT there is such a thing as intemperate legislation on the subject of a prohibitory liquor law, has just been made conspicuously manifest by the self-stultifying action of the Iowa State Senate. Both branches of the Legislature of that State adopted a prohibitory amendment to the constitution, the vote of the people on its ratification or rejection to be taken next June. After the proposed amendment had been signed by the Governor and in the closing hours of the session, the Senate adopted a resolution declaring it to be the meaning of the amendment that it did not prohibit the manufacture of liquors in Iowa for sale outside of the State, but only their manufacture for sale as a beverage within the State. In other words, while Iowa makes it a criminal offense to sell a thimbleful of whiskey to one of her own citizens, she permits it to be manufactured by the barrel and sold to the citizens of other States. This is what the Senate says it meant when it adopted the amendment, but the Courts will enlighten it by deciding that it cannot play fast and loose with the question in that easy way. The Iowa Senate has bro't prohibitory legislation into supreme contempt and ridicule, and has done what it could to confirm the general belief that members of a State Legislature who are too cowardly themselves to assume the responsibility of voting for or against a prohibitory amendment, but who take refuge in a submission of the question to a vote of the people as an easy way out of the dilemma, are as a general rule miserable time-servers and shuffling hypocrites.

WHEN the counsel for Brady, Dorsey and other defendants in the Star route cases, last week asked the Washington court to quash the indictments against their clients, on the ground that certain formalities in the action of the grand jury, as prescribed by an act of the Maryland Legislature and claimed to be in force in the district of Columbia, the said act having been passed in 1722, just one hundred and sixty years ago, it is a substantial admission of their guilt and will be so regarded by the country. If Brady, Dorsey & Co. were innocent they wouldn't attempt through Bob Ingersoll, one of their counsel, to escape conviction by taking refuge under a musty and presumably an obsolete law enacted fifty-four years before the date of the Declaration of Independence when Maryland was a colony of Great Britain. Innocent men don't answer indictments in a criminal court in that way, but demand a thorough investigation of all the charges against them. The question whether this ancient statute of Maryland is still in force in the District was argued at great length before Judge Wylie on Friday and Saturday by the lawyers concerned on both sides, and the Judge said he would give the matter a full and patient consideration before coming to a conclusion.

AT the city and town elections in Ohio, on Monday last, the Republicans were shaken up as if by a regular political earthquake. In Cincinnati their ticket was defeated by more than eight thousand votes. Results equally disastrous overwhelmed the "grand old Republican party" in Cleveland, Toledo, Columbus, and many other large cities and towns. All this was brought about in consequence of the passage by the present Republiican Legislature of a license law which is specially obnoxious to the German Republicans, hundreds of whom refused to vote the Republican ticket on Monday, and swear since in the roughest kind of Dutch, that they have joined the Democratic party to stay. The result of this Ohio election is very significant when we reflect on the cause that produced it, and foreshadows the utter defeat of the Republican party in that State next November. In Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, in all of which similar elections were held on Tuesday last, the Republicans in many of the cities and large towns met with the same disastrous defeat that overtook their political brethren in Ohio.

THE President sent to the Senate on Tuesday last his veto of the Chinese bill. In our next issue we will state his reasons for doing so. It is conceded at Washington that the veto renders certain the success of the Democrats at the next State elections in California, Oregon and Nevada.

OUR PHILADELPHIA LETTER.

EASTER EGGS AND CARDS—CAMBRIA COUNTY AS AN IRON CENTRE—CORRUPT GOVERNMENT—BUILDING PAMPERED INTERESTS—PLATES SET FOR 306—ABOUT TO REAP HER REWARD.

PHILADELPHIA, April 4, 1882.

[Regular Correspondence of THE FREEMAN.]

DEAR HENRY—The fashion of Philadelphia patiently awaits the advent of Easter, and its advent is being heralded by an unusual display of handsome offerings. Certain branches of trade that have been dull during the season prescribed by the Church will be amply compensated by the eagerness and avidity with which their customers will indulge their fancies and their pleasures when Easter hymns shall have ushered in the commencement of festivities. Among the novelties in Easter eggs are wonderful specimens in styles, sizes and material—from the smallest humming bird to the largest ostrich—and druggists are offering the newest preparation for coloring the eggs. Easter cards and designs of various kinds and styles are lavishly displayed and greatly appreciated by the crowds that linger on the thoroughfares of the city. Easter is now nearly as well remembered as Christmas. Not only Church members, but those who take no interest in the religious part of the celebrations, have come to regard it as a special season for festivities. Milliners and modestes who have enjoyed a season of repose are actively engaged in the preparation of startling novelties for the Spring season.

CAMBRIA COUNTY AS AN IRON CENTRE.

In the local columns of the last FREEMAN I see a paragraph announcing that the Cambria Iron Company, of Johnstown, at its last pay-day, had disbursed to its operatives at that point the large sum of one hundred and seven thousand dollars. Wonderful has been the progress of the iron business in Cambria county within the last thirty years. Less than thirty years ago Cambria was unknown as an iron county, while to-day it is noted as an iron centre. The first furnace in Cambria county, "Cambria Furnace," was built on Laurel Run, a few miles below Johnstown, by George S. King, David Stewart, John K., and William S. Shryock, in 1841. It was followed by Mill Creek Furnace, built by John Bell & Co., and Ben's Creek Furnace, built by Geo. S. King & Co., in 1845, and Elizabeth Furnace, on Blacklick Creek, built by Ritter & Rogers, in 1846, and by Mount Vernon Furnace, at Johnstown, built by Peter Levergood & Co., in 1846. It was not, however, until 1853 that the iron business began to flourish in Cambria county through the enterprise of Geo. S. King, the originator of the Cambria Iron Works. To George S. King is Cambria indebted for the development of the minerals within its borders and for the establishment of the Cambria Iron Works, the most extensive establishment of the kind in the United States, if not the most extensive in the world. But for the part taken by Mr. King, the iron business would not have had so healthy a growth in Cambria county.

In January, 1851, in the first number of the second volume of the Mountain Echo appeared an editorial stating that some of the enterprising citizens of Johnstown contemplated the erection of glass works on an extensive scale. The editor, in a gushing article, bid the enterprise God speed, and concluded his editorial in the following words: "We hope to live to see the day when the smoke of a hundred manufactories shall rise to Heaven from our peaceful valley." At that day Cambria county had no distinction in enterprises of any kind, and not until through the enterprising efforts of Mr. King did Cambria county, which is now one of the leading iron producing counties of a State that is the leading iron producing State of the Union, begin to advance in the iron business. In 1870 Pennsylvania made a fraction over fifty per cent. of all the iron and steel made by all the States and Territories, and in 1880 made a fraction under fifty per cent. of all the iron and steel produced by all the States and Territories, and Cambria county herself produced nearly thirty per cent. of the product of Pennsylvania. Of the 7,205,140 tons of iron and steel, the total product of all the States and Territories in 1880, Pennsylvania produced 3,616,668 tons, of which Cambria produced 260,140 tons. The Echo man has lived to witness what he in 1851 hoped to see. A table of statistics of the iron and steel productions of the United States, prepared by James M. Swank, Esq., Secretary of the American Iron and Steel Association, presents many features that are startling and interesting. Pennsylvania has long been the honored leader of her sister States in contributing to the variety and quantity of American iron products, and little Cambria stands fourth in the class of the iron-producing counties of the State.

CORRUPT GOVERNMENT.

The culpable mismanagement of the Republican party does not admit of concealment, nor does it admit of defense or excuse. The corruption of the Republican government of Philadelphia had reached to such a stage that the instinct of self-preservation drove honest Republicans into the establishment of a political Vigilance Committee to hang up their own plunderers, and the corruption at Harrisburg in the administration of State affairs was equally bad. When there is no question or doubt about the Republican party having given us a dishonest government will not the people of Pennsylvania change their public servants? The Republicans of the State have furnished the Democrats with a battle cry. The issue is now "Honest Government." Let the Democracy of Pennsylvania now put in the field for Governor an honest candidate and take up the cry for honest government. The people of Pennsylvania are ripe for a change, and only await the opportunity to vote for a proper Democratic candidate for Governor. The people of Pennsylvania want a better government than Republicanism gives them, and there is now a chance for Democratic success. The Democracy of this grand old commonwealth can put itself in the strongest possible attitude if its leaders have wisdom. If the delegates to the Democratic convention to meet at Harrisburg make the proper nominations the Democrats will carry the State.

BUILDING UP PAMPERED INTERESTS.

The recent vote in the Senate in favor of the Tariff Commission bill is a notice served upon the country that for at least two years to come there shall be no let-up to tariff exactions. There should be no assent, implied or actual, to the robbery which impoverishes the labor of the country by unnecessary burdens to build up pampered interests. The workingmen and women in the mills and the mines, if they ever come to understand, as in good time they must, that not only the Treasury surplus of one hundred and twenty million dollars, but that sum twice told is every year directly and indirectly filched from their hard earnings. When the laboring class of the country come to understand this the Republican party will never elect another President. There is not another government on the face of the earth that would dare to go on from year to year with a scheme of taxation so exhaustive of the resources of a nation without making such salutary reductions as would bring income and outlay within hailing distance of each other. Last year there were $120,000,000 taken from the pockets of the people of this country in excess of the wants of the Government. The public expenditures were on a very large scale; there was a generous provision for the sinking fund; the interest on the public debt was paid at maturity, and there was $120,000,000 still in the Treasury. Yet it is the deliberate intention of Congress to make no change. No stop is to be put to the robbery which impoverishes the labor of the country by unnecessary burdens to build up pampered interests.

HE SETS PLATES FOR 306.

When Arthur gave his big Grant dinner he set plates for 306. True there would have been a vacant chair, but as a favor Chum Bliss was induced to take it, and Dave Mouatt's victuals were sent him to the penitentiary in a tin-pail. While the White House was ablaze on that memorable occasion, when music, wine and wit flowed freely, a man passed by who paused for a moment and gazed and then with a weary, white scared face, fled with a shriek. The flying, shrieking man, was the once famous Rodgers—ex-Secretary of Mrs. Hayes' iced tea and Graham bread administration.

ABOUT TO REAP HER REWARD.

South Carolina seems to have got badly worsted in her trade with the Fraudulent Hayes and is about to reap her reward. It will be remembered that Congressman Small, and a lot more of higher and lower officials, were convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for various crimes, involving theft, bribery, corruption, etc., most all of whom were pardoned on certain conditions. Now, at the instigation of Smalls and other South Carolina politicians, Attorney General Brewster instructs his subordinates to prosecute all the election indictments in South Carolina with the utmost severity. Instructions are emphatic to the extent that the best and highest citizens shall be convicted by negro juries in the United States Court. So South Carolina is about to reap her reward for the exhibition of an ill-timed clemency.

A Catholic Pastoral Letter.

WHAT THE PROVINCIAL COUNCIL SAYS ABOUT CHURCH AUTHORITY, LABOR AND IRELAND.

The Catholic Provincial Council recently met in Cincinnati and among other things prepared a lengthy pastoral letter to be read in all the churches. It received its first publication on Thursday in the Catholic Telegraph. It begins with a review of the progress of religion since the last council, twenty years ago, and congratulates the Church on its transition from a mission epoch to a condition of fixity. It then goes on to speak of the necessity of obedience to authority. It holds that all men are not equal and that men ordained to rule as kings, magistrates, bishops and priests have rights which their subjects do not. It laments the disposition to try God before a court of human reason, and says that no man has a right to teach falsehood or to change a jot or tittle of the law of God. It is very outspoken on the subject of labor unions, and says that a man's labor is his own as much as the gold of the rich man and that he has a right to sell it as he pleases at a fair price, and as long as men accede to others the same freedom as they claim for themselves, there is no sin in labor banding together for self-protection; but labor unions are liable to fail and cannot be sustained when they attempt to force a man to join a union, or to work for a price fixed by a union. Catholics cannot be partners in any attempt to coerce others against their just rights or to do injury to the person or property of others.

The letter has a long paragraph on newspapers, in which it specifically denounces what it calls the illegitimate means used by the Irish World in its advocacy of the cause of Ireland, but adds: "We are ready to co-operate with the Bishops of Ireland in any legitimate effort to ameliorate the present unhappy condition of the Irish people." The letter condemns much of the modern church music and says that the Gregorian chant is the recognized form. It directs that all music that savors of the sensuous and the profane, the theatre or the opera, shall be excluded from choirs, as also all music that attracts the attention of people from the altar to the choir. Much is said condemnatory of secret societies, especially such as have a religious hierarchy or form of liturgy. Reverting to the subject of authority the letter says: "It is not Catholic doctrine that all power comes from the people and that rulers do not exercise authority as their own, but as trusted to them by the people. The Catholic doctrine is that the grant of power is not given by the people, but they only designate who is to wield it. As to the priest, the people are commanded to seek the law from his lips, and in all matters of civil life appertaining to faith and morals, the priest has a right to speak and the people are required to listen." This doctrine, it is said, may be unpopular with modern liberalism, but that does not prove it untrue.

GOOD FOR DAVID DAVIS.—The following manly and outspoken letter was addressed by the President pro tem of the Senate, Mr. Davis, of Illinois, to the mass meeting held at the Cooper Institute, New York, on Monday night, to protest against the arbitrary and prolonged imprisonment of American citizens in Ireland under the coercion bill. Mr. Davis' letter is in marked contrast with the weak and indecisive course of Blaine, as well as that of his successor, Frelinghuysen, and especially with the cowardly inaction of Lowell, the American Minister to England, and its vigorous statement of the duty of the Government will command universal approval:

VICE PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, March 28, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I regret extremely that the demands of public duty will deny me the personal satisfaction of being present at the Cooper Union meeting on April 3.

My sympathies are earnestly enlisted for the object which has made that meeting necessary, not only for the protection of American citizenship abroad, but as an emphatic protest against the violent action of the British Government in treating Irish-American citizens as criminals, without a hearing, and without a trial, against their reiterated declarations of innocence.

If there was no treaty to protect them, international comity, and the constantly-professed friendship between Great Britain and the United States, entitled these imprisoned citizens to at least the rights under the boasted common law.

England may suspend habeas corpus in time of profound peace, and, under that suspension, she may assume to violate the letter and the spirit of existing treaties. But when she touches the person, and restrains the liberty of an innocent American citizen, she does it at her peril, and should be made to feel the consequences of that arbitrary and indefensible act.

Congress explicitly directed fourteen years ago what should be done in cases like those which have justly provoked deep resentment. That duty has yet to be performed, and I hope the strong voice of your meeting will prevent any further postponement of the plain command of the law.

The time has come when the fullest rights of American citizenship must be asserted. The present experience and other examples equally trying to public patience render this assertion now an imperative obligation, without which the United States would deservedly lose position before the world.

Very respectfully. DAVID DAVIS.

A. E. Ford, Esq., Sec'y of Committee, &c.

"Throw Physic to the Dogs, I'll none of It."

We do not feel like blaming Macbeth for this expression of disgust. Even nowadays most of the cathartics are great repulsive pills, enough to "turn one's stomach." Had Macbeth ever taken Dr. Pierce's "Purgative Pellets" he would not have uttered those words of contempt. By druggists.

—After quarreling with her husband, in Lincoln county, Arkansas, on Monday of last week, Mrs. Ballard broke the necks of two of her children, aged respectively seven and four years, and threw their bodies into a pond. She then jumped into the pond with her baby in her arms, and both were drowned.

ANOTHER STEAMBOAT DISASTER.

THE PACKET GOLDEN CITY BURNED AT HER WHARF AT MEMPHIS—OVER TWENTY OF THE PASSENGERS, PRINCIPALLY WOMEN AND CHILDREN, LOSE THEIR LIVES.

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 30.—The Cincinnati and New Orleans packet, Golden City, en route from New Orleans to Cincinnati, was burned at her wharf at 4:30 o'clock this morning.

The Golden City left New Orleans last Saturday with a crew of about sixty and forty cabin passengers, including fifteen women and nine children. When she was approaching the wharf here at 4:30 this morning she was discovered to be on fire. She was immediately headed for shore, and in four minutes touched Beal street wharf.—The line thrown out parted, and the burning steamer then floated with the swift current down stream. Some of the passengers had already leaped off, but many of them were still confined in the burning mass, as it drifted away.

ORIGIN OF THE FIRE.

The fire was started by a watchman, who accidentally set fire to a lot of jute which was stored amidships. The steamer had just whistled to land and the watchman went among the deck passengers to notify them that they were approaching Memphis and that those destined for the city must get ashore, when the bottom of his lamp dropped in some jute, and before the flames could be extinguished they had spread all over the deck of the vessel. Marion Purcell, one of the pilots, was in the clerk's office when the alarm was first sounded, and he rushed thro' the cabin, bursting open the state-room doors and awakening the passengers. So rapidly did the flames spread that within five minutes after the discovery of the fire, which broke out amidships, the aft part of the steamer was all ablaze, and those that were saved had to flee in their night clothes. Pat Haley, one of the firemen, ran up stairs to notify the head engineer, but by the time he had reached the hurricane deck, the flames had mounted almost to the pilot house, and he was driven back by the fire. He then rang the alarm bell, and, seeing the boat was approaching the shore, ran down the forward stairs and jumped on board the tug Oriole, just as the Golden City struck her.

ESCAPING FROM DEATH.

Seeing that they were sinking he sprang aboard the steamer again and made his way to the coal bardge lying alongside. Two negro deck hands and a white deck passenger were killed when the tug was struck as they were caught between the bow of the boat and the side of the tug. There were about ten men on the fan tail of the boat who must have been drowned, as when Haley leaped into the river he saw three men go overboard and drown and the others, he thinks, must have shared the same fate.—Bryce Purcell, the pilot, made his escape by climbing over the front part of the pilot house, the fire then being in the rear. Felix Lehman, who was a passenger, says there was a merry party aboard and nearly all the passengers remained up until midnight. They had one or two gentlemen aboard who played the piano, and they furnished the passengers with music and singing. He was awakened by having his state-room burst in, and heard the cry of fire. Seizing his clothes he ran forward, and reached the barge just in time, as the next minute the vessel floated down the stream.

CIRCUS ANIMALS LOST.

Stowe's Circus, which was taken on board at Vidalia, La., and six cages of animals and birds, together with the ticket and band wagons, tents and horses, were lost. J. C. Crone, owner of a side show to the circus, is supposed to have perished. His room mate, H. N. Ackerman, says he dragged him out of bed to the foot of the stairs through the smoke and is satisfied that he never arose from where he left him.

J. J. Glenroy, one of the saved, resides in Philadelphia. He has for two years been keeper of the animals in Stowe's menagerie. He states that he was asleep under one of the animal cages on the forward part of the lower deck when the cry of fire was given. He leaped forth, looked about, but saw no fire; then he looked again, and saw that the entire centre of the boat was a mass of flames.

As soon as the boat touched the coal fleet he jumped ashore. He saw the officers of the steamer at work making the hawsers fast, then he saw the lines give way and the steamer swing out and drift down. A cage containing a lion sank down in the middle as the flames enveloped it. He heard no cry from any of the animals as they were being burned alive. The six cages contained a lion, a tiger, two leopards, an Albino deer, monkeys and birds. Of four horses belonging to the circus, aboard the steamer, three were saved, but one, the celebrated trick horse "Selim," was lost.

It is impossible to gather a complete list of the lost, as the books of the steamer were lost. As far as can be ascertained there were twenty-three ladies on board the ill-fated steamer.

THE LIST OF THE LOST.

The following is a list of the lost, as corrected up to midnight: Dr. Monahan and wife, Jackson, O.; Mrs. Creary, Winton Place, near Cincinnati; Miss Luella Creary, Winton Place; W. H. Stowe and wife, Henderson, Ky.; Ollie Wood and wife, Henderson, Ky.; Mrs. Anna Smith, Massachusetts; Mrs. Helen Percival, Hawesville, Ky.; Mrs. L. E. Kouns and three children; Miss Campbell, a relative of Mrs. Kouns; Rob't Kelly, second engineer; Mary Boyd and Amanda Atchison, chambermaids; J. C. Crone, owner of the side show to Stowe's Circus; three of the deck crew (colored) and a negro boy servant;

The owners of the Golden City are Captain J. D. Hegler, Sterling C. McIntyre and W. F. McIntyre, all of Cincinnati. The vessel was valued at $40,000 and insured for $30,000. She was built in 1876.

Wash Smith, the colored captain of the watch, was sent to jail on Thursday on a warrant charging him with murder through carelessness in causing the fire on the steamer.

THRILLING STORY OF A LADY WHOSE MOTHER PERISHED IN THE FLAMES.

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 31.—Miss Ionia Malsin, of Hawesville, Ky., one of the three lady passengers saved from the burned steamer, tells the following story of her experience: She was going from New Orleans to her home in Hawesville, in company with her mother, Mrs. H. M. Percival, and her nephew, Wm. McKinley, a lad of fifteen years. There had been a merry party in the cabin and she and her mother retired after 11 o'clock. Some time after they had fallen asleep they were awakened by McKinley, who rushed into their state room, and said that the boat was on fire. She and her mother got up, and, without waiting to dress themselves, went out into the cabin, which was full of smoke. They walked hurriedly forward, her mother being a little behind.—On arriving at the front guard of the boat she saw that her mother was not with them, and she attempted to run back after her, but was prevented by McKinley, who said that she was only going to her own destruction, as the cabin was then a mass of flame and smoke. "Oh, I thought she was with us," moaned Miss Malsin, tossing wildly on her couch. "I wanted to go back to her, but he would not let me." She said her nephew pulled her out on the guards and lowered her down to Charles Ross, jr., a passenger, who was standing on a coal barge. He caught her in his arms and took her ashore.

The steamer Fulton, which conveyed Captain McIntyre and party to the wreck of the Golden City this morning, has just returned. A diver went down, but could do nothing.—The wreck lies in twenty-five feet of water with the hull up stream, and the current is so swift that all efforts to go through the cabin by the diver proved fruitless. No more dead bodies have been recovered since the one mentioned yesterday, which has been identified as that of Mrs. Anna Smith, of Springfield, Mass., who had been visiting relatives in New Orleans.

The object in taking them all in one vehicle was to manage the woman easily, as she refused to be parted from the rest.

—A. C. Patrick shot his wife through the heart at Seward, Neb., on Saturday night, and then fired at each of his two sons, slightly wounding one of them. Patrick had trouble with his wife in the east, and she moved to Nebraska with the sons and engaged in farming. He followed, and for some time had been loafing about Seward and drinking whisky. The murder was evidently premeditated. Patrick escaped.

—On Friday evening three men named Martin, Sanders and Franks, were at work at Dunbar, Fayette county, when Martin and Franks got into a dispute, which finally ended in blows. Franks was getting the better of Martin and Sanders attempted to part them. Failing in this he picked up a brick and struck Franks on the head. The wounded man died during the night. Next morning Sanders was arrested and lodged in jail.

—Judge Cook, of Forest county, will contest with General Harry White, of Indiana, for the Republican Congressional nomination in the Twenty-fifth district. As the hero of the Kiskiminetas has twice lost the district to the Republicans the law of self-preservation may inspire the nomination of Judge Cook or some man other than General White.

—The Chicago Evening Journal's Omaha, Neb., special of April 3d, says: A terrible tragedy occurred here about 9 o'clock this morning on Thirteenth street, near Bohemian Hall. A Bohemian named Joseph Jones shot his wife dead on the street and then shot himself through the heart. They were about 56 or 57 years of age, and the two bodies are now lying side by side at the undertaker's. Domestic infelicity of several years' standing was the cause.

—The Washington (Pa.) Register gives an account of the extraordinary flow of gas from a well which has been drilled to a depth of twenty-two hundred feet on the McGugin farm, near Middletown, in Washington county. The pressure is so great as to throw the drilling tools out of the well and compel a suspension of work. When lighted, the escaping gas blazes up seventy feet high, the light being visible for twenty miles around. It is thought that such an immense supply of gas indicates the presence of petroleum in paying quantities.

—On Monday morning, about 3 o'clock, seven miles east of Knoxville, Tenn., Wm. Vance murdered his three year-old step-daughter by crushing the child's skull against the floor. The child was in bed with its mother and father and became fretful during the night. Vance got out of patience, jumped up, seized the child by the hair, and beat its brains out on the floor. The screams of the mother brought two neighbors to the house, and they found Vance with the child in his arms. He laid it down, and started off toward the barn, and made his escape; but officers are on his track who will catch him, as he is club-footed and travels slowly.

—Robert Bluen, a blacksmith, 29 years of age, of Cleveland, Ohio, at 4:30 Friday morning fired twice at his wife, who was lying beside him in bed, inflicting in her forehead wounds which are dangerous, but not necessarily fatal. She jumped from her bed and rushed from the room. Bluen shot at her twice more, but without further effect. He then placed the muzzle of the revolver against his own forehead and fired a bullet into his brain, dying instantly. He had been married only six months and was devoted to his wife. For three months he had been disabled by rheumatism, and it is supposed he was deranged by pain and perhaps the fear of poverty.

—In Pittsburgh, on Thursday last, Miss Annie Haggerty, daughter of a well-known citizen of Lawrenceville, and Miss Eleanor Ewing, daughter of Gen. Hugh Ewing, of Lancaster, Ohio, and a niece of General Tom Ewing and General Sherman, took the veil of the order of the Sisters of Mercy. Though bred in the lap of luxury, and possessed of rare beauty and many accomplishments, Miss Ewing six months ago gave up the gayety of Washington life and entered the convent as a postulant. Thursday her period of probation closed and she received the white veil. Miss Ewing will be known in religion as Sister Mary Veronicia. Her mother, two brothers, and sister Edith were present. Sickness in the family of the Shermans prevented their attendance.

—On Saturday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, five boys were playing in a sand tunnel near New Providence, a small station on the Perkiomen Railroad, when the top caved in, covering them all up. A short time after several men were passing by, when they noticed a pair of feet protruding from the sand. They went to work to remove the sand, and three boys were taken out dead. They were John Rowland, aged 12 years; Josiah Rowland, aged 13; George Rowland, aged 10. The other two are so badly injured that they are not expected to survive. Their names are Samuel Mentz, 14 years old, and Harry Mozear, 9 years old. Great indignation exists against the owners of the sand for allowing it to remain at such a prominent place. The three Rowlands were the children of Lewis Rowland, an engineer on the Perkiomen Railroad.

—Sheriff William Estes, of Stokes county, North Carolina, was shot and killed on Thursday night last while robbing his own office. He left home, saying he would be absent some days, and directed his wife not to allow any one to stay all night, and at the same time gave her the safe key. About dark one of the neighbors came to his house, and, Mrs. Estes having raised no objection, he went off to a room to spend the night. After he had retired two men came to the house and asked leave to stay, and Mrs. Estes objected. They, however, went in and demanded the safe key, threatening to kill her if she refused it. She ran up stairs and informed her guest and was told by him to go down, deliver the key, and say nothing of his presence. The men then proceeded to rob the safe. While they were thus engaged Mrs. Estes' friend came down and killed both of the men. Upon examination it was found that one of them was the Sheriff, who had disguised himself, and the other was one of his neighbors.

—On last Tuesday morning a fire broke out in the Standard Oil Refinery No. 1 situated on Butler street, Eighteenth ward, Pittsburg, covering an area of four blocks. The fire was caused by an explosion of chrysoline in tank No. 12, in which there were five hundred and thirty barrels of fluid. The cover of the tank was blown off, and crashing through the roof of the settling house set fire to the oil. The flames communicated to a warehouse—a three-story brick building—three hundred feet long and seventy feet wide, containing three thousand filled barrels of refined oil and nineteen thousand empty barrels, beside over one hundred thousand pounds of glue. The warehouse, settling house, and tanks containing distillate were destroyed, involving a loss to the Standard Oil Company of at least $1,025,000. The fire will burn all night, but it is not spreading. The entire department of the city was called out, and their efforts thus far have prevented the flames from spreading to the buildings adjacent.

A BEAUTIFUL GIRL DISFIGURED WITH VITRIOL.—Miss Mollie Boyer, aged 17, with handsome eyes, fair complexion, and a wealth of dark tresses, was drenched with vitriol on Saturday evening as she was entering her father's residence, 1,919 Mervine street, Philadelphia. Miss Mollie was blinded by the shower, and fell with a cry of agony into the arms of her sister, who had come to the door to admit her. The girl was taken into the house, and the vitriol as quickly as possible was wiped from her face. One of her eyes was dreadfully burned, and a portion of her hair was burned from her head. Her cheeks were blistered, and her shoulders were badly burned. Her sister escaped injury, but a new silk dress which she was wearing for the first time, was completely ruined. The motive for the assault is a mystery. Mr. John E. Keyes and his wife and 4-year-old son occupy the house from which the vitriol was thrown. Some of the victim's friends who saw the vitriol thrown, say that they saw an old lady, who, it is supposed, was Mrs. Keys, lean out of the third story window, from which the vitriol came, as though watching the effect of the deadly shower. The two families are not acquainted, and no trouble of any kind has occurred between them. A warrant for Mrs. Keys arrest was sworn out. The general belief is that she is crazy.

THE MISSISSIPPI FLOODS.—From Morgan city, La., to Chucahoula, nineteen miles in the direction of New Orleans, the country is one vast stretch of water varying in depth from three to six feet. The water throughout this section has risen five inches and is rising at the rate of one inch every four hours. At Fayetteville, fourteen miles east, the water is eight inches below the flood of 1874. From Chucahoula there is no land visible save a small mound at Tigerville, and as you approach Morgan city some small sections of land barely showing above the surface of the water. In many places the water reaches half way to the ceiling of the houses. Five-sixths of Morgan city is under water, varying from six inches to six feet in depth. Skiffs and pirogues are utilized on the streets for communication along the principal business blocks and sidewalks have been erected some four or five feet above the banquets, and in most of the buildings false floors have been improvised.

JESSE JAMES KILLED.—A despatch from St. Joseph, Mo., of April 3d, says: "Chas. and Robert Ford, who at one time belonged to the Jesse James gang and were engaged in the Winston and Blue cut train robberies, have been in St. Joseph for a week for the purpose of arresting Jesse James; but being afraid, as it is alleged, to make the attempt, they shot him down at Thirteenth and Lafayette streets to day and then surrendered to the authorities and were lodged in jail. There is great excitement over the affair, several thousand persons being in the streets. The wife of the desperado was on the spot in a few minutes after the shooting and wept copiously over his remains. The body was taken in charge by the police. A lot of ammunition and several weapons, including pistols and a rifle, were found in the house where the outlaw had been stopping."

—The meanest thief in existence has come to the front in Hollidaysburg, where on last Friday night he stole a silver watch from the body of a colored man named James Madison Washington, who had just died and whose remains had not yet been prepared for burial.

—There is little if anything in the line of dry goods, boots, shoes, hats, caps, groceries, notions, etc., which cannot be found as fresh and cheap at the variety store of John Owens on High street, as at any other house in Ebensburg. John keeps a choice stock and sells at the lowest possible prices.

—Dare to do right, though the world may oppose; buy from Cham. Roberts, who very well knows that success in this life depends in great measure upon honest, fair dealing, which is always a treasure, and with that as his motto there is no one who denies that his prices are low, while the best goods he supplies.

—Mr. R. F. Myers, of Altoona, arrived in Ebensburg Wednesday afternoon with seventeen Texan mustangs, of the best breed, which he proposes selling at public sale at the Foster House stable, to-morrow (Saturday) afternoon, beginning at 1 o'clock. Farmers and others interested will do well to make a note of this.

—Sister Mary de Sales, nee Ann Caroline, daughter of the late Dr. Aristide Rodrigue, of Philadelphia, and granddaughter of Mr. Hugh Bellas, of Sunbury, Pa., died at St. Mary's convent, Sisters of Mercy, Pittsburg, on Thursday last, March 30th. We presume her age to have been about 40 years. May her soul rest in peace.

—We regret to learn of the serious illness of the excellent wife of our worthy friend Lawrence Murphy, of Cambria township. Mrs. Murphy gave birth to twins a few days ago, and since then the condition of herself and offspring has been very precarious, though there is reason to hope that the lives of all three will be spared.

—The avaricious old miser who was trying to make a contract with "Old Nick" to furnish him with coal, on his way down to the "lower regions," was no more avaricious than the man who will not spend 25 cents for a bottle of Sines' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Hoarhound, when he, or any member of his family is caught with a cough or cold.

—Mr. John Carney, of Allegheny township, will be a candidate for Poor House Director at the coming primary election, and if nominated and elected there can be no question but he will discharge the duties of the position honestly and conscientiously. He is deserving of fair consideration at the hands of his fellow Democrats, and will, we are sure, prove worthy of their confidence.

—Miss Gussie Morgan, one of the two daughters of Mr. John Morgan, who have been inmates with their father of the Johnstown small-pox hospital, died of that dreadful disease on Wednesday morning of this week, aged about sixteen years. Her father, we believe, is recovering but what the condition of his other daughter is we are unable to say. May God pity the sadly afflicted family.

—A letter from our friend and everybody's friend, Prof. F. A. Lyte, late superintendent of our borough schools, brings the gratifying intelligence of his safe arrival in Minneapolis, Minn., accompanied with the request to send him the FREEMAN for one year, which we shall do with pleasure. As a civil gentleman and a civil engineer Mr. Lyte has the best wishes of hosts of friends in this community.

—The Carrolltown News, which is well deserving of the success with which it is meeting, has entered upon the fourth year of its existence, and bids fair to live for many years to come. This is as it should be, for no man has ever worked more earnestly or assiduously than Brother Williams to make his paper worthy of patronage, and none there are whom we would rather see reap a rich reward for his labors.

—Six head of fine young cattle, weighing each from fifteen to sixteen hundred pounds, were purchased the other day by Mr. Joseph Gutwald, butcher, of this place, who has some of the meat now on exhibition and sale for Easter consumption, at his well known establishment on High street. More luscious steaks, roasts, etc., were never served up to our people, and those who want to get first choice shouldn't delay about calling on Mr. Gutwald.

—Two hundred and fifty-seven shares of stock in the projected street railway in Johnstown have already been subscribed, leaving only sixty-three additional shares to be taken before application can be made for a charter. There does not seem to be any doubt of the success of the project. The Mayor of Altoona last week vetoed an ordinance for the construction of a street railway in that city, but the Common Council subsequently passed it over his veto.

—Dr. M. R. B. Creery has removed his dental office to his residence on Julian street, in the building recently purchased by him and known as the Singer property, where he will be glad to welcome all who stand in need of his professional services. The Doctor has built up a business which requires the constant attention of himself and his worthy brother, and as they do good work at honest prices they certainly deserve to retain and increase their large circle of customers.

—Mr. Martin Munday died at his residence in Jackson township on Tuesday of this week, the victim of a cancerous affliction. His age was about 70 years. Mr. Munday was the father of Cassie Munday, who, along with Polly Paul, was murdered by Buser and Houser in Croyle township, this county, in 1865, the two miscreants being subsequently hung for the crime. He was an industrious old German, respected by all who knew him, and many there are who will be sorry to learn of his death.

—It should be pretty well known by this time that Mr. James Wilkinson, marble manufacturer, formerly of Loretto, has been carrying on business in this place for a year or more past, and as his work is such as to commend itself to the admiration of everybody, it is little wonder he is kept busy. It is but faint praise to say that Mr. W. has no superior anywhere as a mechanic, and those who favor him with an order may rely upon getting a first class job at the lowest living prices. Call and examine some of his work.

—The clock in the tower of the new Court House will likely have been placed in position before this issue of the FREEMAN reaches its readers, and that will successfully wind up Mr. Shenk's contract. The gas will be turned on upon the return of the gentleman who has that part of the business by sub-contract, and who went eastward Tuesday to procure some missing part of the machinery. Immediately succeeding this the Commissioners will assume control of the building, which will be formally dedicated on the 25th of May.

—About seventy-five persons in the southern part of Westmoreland county have embraced Mormonism, not, however, as taught by Brigham Young, but as maintained and practiced by Joe Smith, who, as is well known, never believed in or advocated the odious and disgusting doctrine of polygamy. The converts are mostly farmers of good character. Two Mormon missionaries of the Joe Smith school have also been at work for some time in the adjoining county of Fayette, and are said to be meeting with remarkable success. What a strange world we live in, anyhow.

—Mrs. Mary Matthews, mother-in-law of our friends and patrons, Messrs. Caron Leahey, of Lilly's, John C. Walkinshaw, of East Conemaugh, and John Hannan, of Johnstown, died at the residence of the first named gentleman one day last week, aged about seventy years. The maiden name of the deceased was Ullery, and she was raised in Blair county, her mother being a member of the Holliday family, the original founders of the borough of Hollidaysburg. We expected a somewhat extended obituary of the deceased lady, but failed to receive it. May her soul rest in peace.

—An accident resulting in the horrible death of a boy named Charles Ditch occurred a few days ago on the narrow guage railroad of the Kemble coal and iron company, which runs from the furnaces at Riddlesburg to the Weimer iron mines in Hopeful, Bedford county. Young Ditch attempted to put the brakes on the cars on which he was riding when he fell to the track between the cars, four of which passed over him, cutting off both legs, almost severing the head from the body and otherwise mangling him, so that death was instantaneous. The unfortunate youth was about 15 years of age.

—Mr. Michael Bracken, of Gallitzin, was introduced to our readers through the medium of a communication in last week's FREEMAN as a candidate for Assembly on the Democratic ticket, and we only echo the sentiment of every man who knows him when we say that he is well worthy of a place on the ticket. He is honest, energetic and intelligent, and possessing as he does in an eminent degree all the good qualities of head and heart which commend him to the confidence and esteem of his fellow men, his nomination would be a fitting tribute to a staunch Democrat and a citizen of undoubted integrity.

—Newton and Charles Sickles, sons of Theodore Sickles, of Hollidaysburg, recently took their departure for Jamestown, Dakota, in a special car which they had fitted up for the long journey and in which they had packed their provisions, household goods, farm implements and live stock, among which were four horses. The journey to be made in this car is over two thousand miles, and would take at least ten days. The Altoona Tribune says the car cost $175 for the trip, and enables the Messrs. Sickles to take all their stock and farm tools for less than a through ticket would have cost for their individual travel by the regular cars.

—Mr. Luke Rogers, of Munster township, wishes to dispose of two farms in said township, containing respectively sixty-six and fifty-five acres, more or less, at private sale. One farm has a stone house and other buildings thereon erected, and the other contains a hewed log house and a good frame barn. Both places are in a good state of cultivation, have each an orchard of choice fruit, are abundantly supplied with pure water, and are situated close to the turnpike, about one-half mile from the village of Munster and within three and a-half miles of Cresson station. For further particulars apply to the owner on the premises or to ex-Sheriff John Ryan, Johnstown, Pa. Advertisement and posters next week.

—Mrs. Mary A. Bradley, of Loretto, who was slightly stricken a short time ago with paralysis, died at her residence in that place on Sunday last aged about 56 years. The deceased was the widow of the late John Bradley, a prominent merchant of Loretto, and widely known throughout the county, whose death occurred a few years ago. Mrs. B. was a highly respectable lady, and was held in the greatest respect and esteem in the community in which she had spent so many years of her life. She was a devoted Christian and possessed all the virtues of a good and true woman. Five sons and two daughters, one of whom is married, survive her. Her remains were interred in the Catholic cemetery at Loretto on Tuesday. May her soul rest in peace.

—The current issue of the Somerset Democrat contains a long account of the dastardly doings of a young and well dressed tramp who was arrested and lodged in jail in that place on Wednesday of this week, after having succeeded in outraging no less than four young girls and a young widow woman within a week's time while passing through that county. It seems from the published account that the lecherous scoundrel told a plausible story of some kind wherever he went, and by that means succeeded in inducing his victims to accompany him until he reached a proper place for his infamous designs, when he forced them to yield to his unholy purpose by flourishing a revolver and bowie knife and threatening to shoot and carve them to pieces if they did not submit.

—The question of the duty of the authorities of a borough in removing ice from pavements and crossings has just been considered by the Supreme Court in the case of Kline against the borough of Mauch Chunk. Kline stepped on snow made slippery by travel while crossing a public thoroughfare, and failing sustained injuries for which a jury awarded him $500 damages. The borough took the case to the Supreme Court, which holds that a borough cannot prevent general slipperiness of the streets and crossings by snow and ice, but that it can prevent accumulations of the same which render pedestrianism dangerous. As it did not appear that Kline had fallen on a ridge of snow, the Court held that the verdict should have been in favor of the borough.

—The Johnstown Tribune of Saturday last says that during the forenoon of that day a young man named David Londregan, son of Michael Londregan, an old and respected citizen of Conemaugh borough, whose mind has been affected for some time past, escaped from his father's residence by the back door and ran at full speed toward Woodvale. As soon as his father discovered his escape he pursued him, but the young man succeeded in reaching Woodvale, where he took possession of a horse and buggy standing in front of a private residence, and jumping into the vehicle drove rapidly up the street. Before he could be overtaken he leaped from the buggy a short distance above the Woodvale crossing, and nearly opposite the "Bluff," and threw himself under the wheels of a freight train, which passed over his right arm, grinding it off close to the shoulder. Dr. Lowman visited him after he had been brought back to his home, and the prospects are that he will recover. His father was making arrangements to take him to Dixmont last Wednesday. David says he did not intend to kill himself, but that his object was to jump on a train and go to Pittsburgh.

—George Bindewalt attempted to force his way into a disorderly house in Johnstown at a late hour on Sunday night last, and with that object in view proceeded to batter in the door with an axe. Before he accomplished his purpose, however, one of the three inmates, all of whom are sisters named Johns, and who at the time were entertaining two young men named Joe Myers and George Allen, drew a bead on the obtruder with a pistol from an upper story window and fired four shots, one of which took effect near the left shoulder-blade and passing downward lodged close to the spine. Bindewalt at once made his way to his boarding-house, not far away, where he was soon after found in bed and arrested by an officer. Meantime the three girls and two young men had fled from the house, but were subsequently taken into custody, as was also the owner of the house, Mrs. Wagner, who occupied a portion of the building. All were given a hearing and each fined $5 and costs, or six days in the lock-up. Each of the principal parties succeeded in obtaining the requisite bail, and all of them were soon after released. Bindewalt's wound is a serious one, though there is no reason to anticipate fatal results.

Gentlemen—Your Hop Bitters have been of great value to me. I was laid up with typhoid fever for over two months and could get no relief until I tried your Hop Bitters. To those suffering from debility or any one in feeble health, I cordially recommend them. J. C. STOETZEL, Fulton street, Chicago.

THE EBENSBURG NORMAL INSTITUTE, an advertisement for which will be found in another column, will open its first session in the Union School building of this place, on Monday, May 8th. It is desirable that a permanent institution of this kind be established in our midst, of which this will constitute its first session. The primary object of the Institute is to more thoroughly fit teachers for the noble work in which they are engaged, and to give them practical and approved methods which they may profitably employ in their future work in the school-room. To this end, a Model School, composed of primary pupils, will be established in connection with the Institute. Although under the supervision of the managers of the school, the Co. Sup't will make a specialty of this department. Methods in instruction and in school management will be given in theory, and at once put into active and actual operation by teachers in the Model School, under the immediate direction of those in charge of the Institute. The bi-weekly meetings of teachers for class criticism and discussion of work will afford opportunities for exchanging opinions and ideas of ways, means and methods of conducting school-room work generally. All necessary conveniences requisite to efficient work will be at the disposal of students.—All grades of classes will be formed, class standing not being sufficient to determine eligibility to the Institute. For further information call on or address L. STRAYER or C. A. RIDDLE, Ebensburg, Pa.

DASTARDLY OUTRAGE.—From the Johnstown Tribune of Thursday we learn that on the previous Wednesday afternoon a brutal outrage was committed on a young widow woman named Arthur, who resides with her father, Mr. Varner, in Conemaugh township. She had gone to East Conemaugh on the day stated to attend to some business, and started for home at 3 P. M. by way of Franklin borough. She soon noticed that a man was following her. He passed her and was soon out of sight, but Mrs. Arthur had not gone very far on the road when the man sprang from behind a bush and struck her in the face, felling her to the ground. He repeated the blows several times on her head and face, wounding her quite severely. His purpose was fortunately interfered with, however, by the screams of two little girls who were gathering tea-berries and had witnessed the attack on Mrs. Arthur. The villain made his escape, going towards Johnstown. Mrs. A. sought refuge in a neighboring house, her clothing being torn and covered with mud. A stranger who was up in that neighborhood near the hour of the assault was subsequently arrested, but he clearly established his innocence, and was of course discharged. We have heard of no other arrest and the scoundrel has no doubt made good his escape.

KILLED AT BEN'S CREEK.—Daniel Henry, foreman of the Eldridge shaft mine at Ben's Creek, this county, met with a fatal accident on last Wednesday morning, while at work in the shaft about ten feet from the bottom. It seems that he was doing something to one of the pumps and had just stepped out into the main shaft, when the descending cage struck and precipitated him to the bottom, breaking his neck and killing him instantly.

"LURAY INN."—The Luray caverns, at Luray, in Virginia, are described by those who have visited them as being the most wonderful and interesting subterranean passages that have ever yet been discovered. They have been fully explored and greatly improved, and the more prominent points of interest illuminated with electric lights. So much for the caverns themselves, which are rendered still more attractive by the fact that the large and elegant hotel attached thereto, and known as the "Luray Inn," is to be under the management of Mr. Geo. K. Mullin, of the St. Cloud, Philadelphia, who understands full well how to keep a hotel and make everybody about him feel perfectly at home. The house will be ready for guests in a few days, and those who patronize it may expect the very best accommodations at the most reasonable rates.

It is the first warm day of spring,
When tender breezes wander by;
And bluer than the soft blue sky
I see the bluebird's radiant wing.

It's warm and raining as we write, and a lesson is taught those of us who can learn a lesson that the long-looked for spring has come again. We are all glad of it. Why? Because opportunity will now be offered us to go to Jas. J. Murphy's, 109 Clinton street, Johnstown, and buy one of those elegant warm weather suits he has for sale so wonderfully cheap. His stock comprehends the very latest styles, and each garment is warranted to be just as represented. There is no shoddy in his establishment.

A dreamy haze of sunlight floats
Across the shining fields of snow,
And, rippling through the glory, flow
A few delicious, liquid notes.

It is the first warm day of spring, and with it comes a wish to be away, wasting in woodlands the delicious hours. But before you go traveling far you should see to it that you are properly shod, for fear the rain and mud and cold and disagreeable weather should overtake you. S. FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

The earliest known nails were made of copper.

The sceptre of Charlemagne was seven feet long.

It is said that hysterical persons have a marked taste for vinegar and green fruit.

About four thousand roses are required to make one pound of ottar of roses.

Remedies are said to be known for the poison of all snakes, except that of the cobra.

A herring yields over 30,000 eggs, myriads of which are devoured by various enemies.

In Africa, vegetable butter is made from the fruit of the shea tree, and is a richer taste than any made of cow's milk.

Researches among the rock formations of western American show that it is to the New World we must look for the perfect pedigree of the horse.

Oysters can live 24 hours in an exhausted receiver. The flame of a candle goes out in one minute, charcoal in five.

Among the largest of Australian snakes is the boa, which sometimes grows to be eighteen feet long, is as thick as a man's leg, sluggish by day and of harmless bite.

The coffee plant has the general appearance of a cherry tree. It grows to the height of twenty and thirty feet, but in the course of culture is kept cut down to five feet.

The oldest map of the heavens is in National Library at Paris. It was made by the Chinese about the year 600 B. C. and contains one thousand four hundred and sixty stars.

To give lightness to what would be an insupportable weight, the cranial bones of the enormous head of the elephant contains numerous air-cells.

Experiments made to test the muscular power of insects, prove that the smaller the insect the greater the proportionate muscular power. A bee is for its weight thirty times stronger than a horse, for a bee harnessed to a wagon can pull twenty times its own weight.

In many parts of the earth's surface, among which are tracts in our Rocky Mountain region, successive lava sheets have been piled one upon another to the height of several thousand feet, and cover areas of many hundred or even thousand square miles.

Strutt, an English authority on games and amusements, speaks of a Yorkshire jumper, named Ireland, whose powers were marvelous. He was six feet high, and at the age of 18 leaped, without the aid of a spring board, over nine horses ranged side by side.

Examine the thread-slime how we will, we can find in it no mouth, no stomach, no muscles, no nerves, no parts of any kind. Yet it eats and breathes and grows. When it is too large to be comfortable it splits in two, and each half goes its way as a living animal.

Another learned blacksmith has arisen to take the place of the late Elihu Burritt, albeit his acquirements are almost exclusely biblical. He is about publishing a book of 566 pages which he has named "Curiosities of the Bible." He has spent nearly thirteen years in the preparation of the work, and has gone through the bible thirteen times with a minute examination of every verse, deducting from it whatever he thought might appeal to the curious interests of readers, and his knowledge of the scriptures is said to be marvelous. The blacksmith's name is Ambrose S, Otley, and his shop is as Booth's Corner, Delaware county, Penn. He works hard at his trade all day and devotes his evenings to study.

A SIMPLE CURE FOR SMALL-POX.—As the prevention or cure of this disease is a question that concerns every person, we ask the perusal of the following, which is taken from the New York Journal of Commerce, one of the most conservative and realiable dailies published in this State.

A lady, the mother of six children, had often sought relief for a pains in the back by taking saltpetre and brandy. She was exposed to the small-pox, and contracted the disease. The premonitory symptoms were violent, fever very high, severe pain in the head and excruciating pain in the region of the kidney.

A physician was then called during the night, but in doubt as to the nature of the disease, though suspecting it to be small-pox, he made no prescription, promising to call early next morning. The fever and pain increasing, she asked her husband to prepare for her the old prescription of saltpetre and brandy. The brandy was not to be had, but he crushed a piece of saltpetre as large as a common white bean. This she took in a teaspoonful of cold water, Feeling better the dose was once or twice repeated. Pain soon subsided and she slept well during the remainder of the night and awakened feeling perfectly well. She had sixty well defined pustules on her face, but they were slightly inflamed and not at all painful. The developments of small-pox on her entire person were in numoer and appearance in keeping with those on her face.

In due time all her children and her husband were affected, as she had been, by fever and pain in the head and back. They received the same treatment with the same favorable result. Several families caught the disease, used the same remedy and in every case the result was favorable.

These facts came to us at first hand, and the reader may rely upon them as exact statements without exaggeration. Here were ten to twelve cases all relieved from pain and fever in less than an hour. The pustules were speedily developed, but were more like the disease in its convalescent stages than any other period. As to the quantity given it was not at all defined, but the first patient within an hour must have taken of salt petre the bulk of three white navy beans.

A HOUSEHOLD HINT.—Children will wear holes through the heels and knees of their stockings almost the first time they put them on. If before the stockings are worn the heels, toes and knees, are run on the wrong side with yarn the same color, catching the threads lightly, so that the right side of the stocking will not be marred, it will strengthen them greatly. When stockings become worn so that they cannot be darned without looking rough and uneven, the best way to mend them is to knit over the hole. Pick up the stitches and knit on two needles apiece, matching the stocking as nearly as possible, large enough to cover the worn place, sew it down on the remaining sides, and when pressed it will show very little. The heels may be mended in the same way, making a separate piece and sewing it over the old part. In knitting stockings it is a good plan to make the heel and toe of heavier yarn than the rest of the stocking, or to knit a heavy cotton thread the same color as the yarn, with the yarn. In mending stockings in more than most anything else does the old adage hold true, "a stitch in time saves nine."

EVERY cook who makes tea or coffee in tin pots knows that after a few months her results are not the same as when the pots are new. If she can afford it, she throws them away and buys new ones. They can be cleansed in a very simple manner, and so last a longer time. Put enough water in to nearly fill them, and then drop a few live coals in the water; gases are absorbed, and the coffee or tea pot is fresh and almost as good as new.

PERUNA is in itself a great physician.

HOW JURORS ARE DRAWN.

The following taken from an exchange, explains how jurors are drawn:

The modus operandi of securing jurors is not understood by every one. The presiding judge every year orders so many names placed in the wheel as in his judgement will suffice for the courts to be held during the ensuing year. The system of drawing these names is as follows: When jurors are required the clerk of the court sends to the sheriff an order directing him to draw a certain number of jurors—the order is called a venire. As soon as received by the sheriff it is registered in a book for that purpose and is sent to the clerk of the jury board, who prepares his book to receive the requisite number of names when drawn. At a time when it is convenient for the jury commission, consisting of the sheriff and jury commissioners, the wheel is opened and the names drawn out separately and duly recorded. The first twenty-four names drawn each term are designated as "grand jurors." After the drawing is concluded, the clerk sends to the sheriff a duly certified list of the names drawn, with the residence and occupation of the juror. This list is the sheriff's guide from which he makes out notices for jurors. It becomes the duty of the officer charged with the service of the notice to find the juror, no matter where he is—whether at the address given or at any other. After proper effort has been made to find the juror the officer returns to the sheriff all the notices he has been unable to serve and a statement of those served, and the sheriff then prepares his answer to the venire and affixing it thereto returns it to the court clerk, who uses the list for his roll. It will be seen by this statement that the list is a complete one, and absolutely free from any chance of fraud.

An idea is to a certain extent prevalent that the sheriff has the power to excuse jurors, but this is wholly erroneous that power being in the court alone. If jurors fail to attend at the time named, the court may impose a fine and issue an attachment for the arrest of the juror and his production in court. A great majority of the jurors summoned serve; some are excused. Deafness, ignorance of our language, physical inability to sit and other ailments are good excuses. Doctors, surgeons and apothecaries are excusable under a statute passed in the reign of Henry VIII. (1616), and now in force. Attorneys and other officers of the court are exempt, but to secure this privilege one must comply with certain stringent requirements of the law. Jurors are under no circumstances excused on account of business engagements, the judges having taken a firm stand on that point, desiring the services in the courts of just that character of men. The pay of a juror is $2 per day.

HOW SIVER THIMBLES ARE MADE.—The manufacture of silver thimbles is very simple, but singularly interesting. Coin silver is mostly used, and is obtained by purchasing coin dollars. The first operation strikes a novice as almost wicked, for it is nothing more than putting bright silver dollars into a dirty crucible and melting them up into solid ingots. These are rolled into the required thickness, and cut by a stamp into circular pieces of the required size. A solid metal bar of the size of the inside of the intended thimble moved by powerful machinery up and down in a bottomless mould of the outside of the thimble, bends the disc into the thimble shape as fast as they can be placed under the descending bar. Once in the shape, the work of brightening, polishing and decorating is done in a lathe. First the blank form is fitted with a rapidly revolving rod. A slight touch of a sharp chisel takes a thin shaving from the end, another does the same on the side, and the third rounds off the rim. A second wheel prints a different ornament around the centre, while a third wheel with sharp points make the indentions on the lower half and end of the thimble. The inside is brightened and polished in a similar way, the thimble being held in a revolving mould. All that remains to be done is to boil the completed thimble in soap suds to remove the oil, brush them up and pack them for the trade.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR A HOT-BED.—In place of a hot-bed, where it is difficult or undesirable to make one, the American Agriculturist says: "If the care of a hot-bed will take time that can be better employed otherwise, it is not worth while for him to make one for the sole purpose of suplying his own garden with plants. It is better to buy a few needed plants, or better still, raise them in winter boxes. We have often referred to these, but their utility does not seem to be generally appreciated. They allow one to provide all the plants of early cabbage, cauliflowers, tomatoes, or whatever would be sown in a hot-bed, which are needed in an ordinary garden, at no expense in money, and very little time or care in labor. Boxes are readily secured at any country store; as the window box need be only three inches deep, an ordinary box may usually be sawed in two, using the top for the bottom of the upper half. These are to be nearly filled with light, rich soil, in which the seeds are to be sown, and kept in a sunny kitchen window. When the plants show the rough leaves, i. e., the leaves that follow the seed-leaves, they are to be transplanted to other boxes and given more room."

SOUND-PRODUCING ANTS.—D. M. Lewis, writing to Nature, says: "With reference to the question whether ants produce sounds which are of such a pitch as to be inaudible to the human ear, I should like to make a suggestion which occurs to me, but which I have no means of carrying out practically. It is a well-known acoustical fact that two notes of high pitch sounding together produce a third whose vibrational number is the difference of the vibrational numbers of the two primary notes. If now we suppose a vibration at the rate of, say 50,000 per second, another at the rate of 38,000 per second would give a different note of 22,000 per second, which would be well within the range of audibility. If then we send up a note beyond the extreme limit of audibility, we shall be able to detect the presence of vibrations which exceed that of the note sent up by the highest number of vibrations of audible sound. It would be interesting to know if this has been attempted, and it the microphone can be applied to assist in the investigation.

HOW TO MAKE LESS NOISE.—Rubber cushions under the legs of the work bench. In a certain factory the hammering of fifty coppersmiths was scarcely audible in the room below, their benches having under each leg a rubber cushion. Kegs of sand or saw-dust can be applied in the same way. A few inches of sand or sawdust are first poured into each keg; on this is laid a board or block, upon which the legs rest, and around the leg or block is poured fine dry sand or sawdust. Not only all noise but all vibration and shock are prevented; and an ordinary anvil, so mounted, may be used in a dwelling house without annoying the inhabitants. To amateurs, whose workshops are usually located in dwelling houses, this device affords a cheap and simple relief from a great annoyance.

IF a kerosene lamp is filled quite full in a cold room, and then is brought into a warm one, the heat will cause the oil to expand and overflow, and lead to the suspicion that the lamp leaks. This should be avoided by not filling completely, knowing this may occur.
